In
V: The Final Battle, Daniel Bernstein is not shown being eaten alive on screen, but it is heavily implied that he is processed and consumed as food by the Visitors.
Here are the details regarding your questions:
Who eats Daniel? After being framed by the Resistance for the death of Brian, Daniel is brought before Steven (a high-ranking male Visitor), who sentences him to death and orders him to be "processed".
Was he eaten by a lizard woman? He was taken away by Visitor technicians to be used as food, which is a fate often attributed to the carnivorous nature of the lizard-like Visitors generally.
Does Diana eat him too? While Diana is the supreme commander and frequently eats rodents/birds, the specific, final, and immediate command to turn Daniel into food comes from Steven.
Could a female visitor eat him? Yes, it is highly likely a female Visitor (such as a technician or soldier) could have been involved, as all Visitors are shown to be carnivorous and consume humans, but the narrative specifically highlights his processing under Steven's orders.

Is he eaten alive? The show implies he is processed as food, but does not explicitly depict the, in-person, consumption.
In summary, Daniel is framed as a traitor, and in a cruel twist, the Visitors, whom he loyally served, sentence him to be eaten.

In V: The Final Battle, Daniel Bernstein, a human collaborator with the Visitors, meets a grim end after being framed by the Resistance for Brian's death. Steven, a high-ranking male Visitor, sentences him to be "processed" as food for the Visitors, and he's dragged away—strongly implying he's consumed by the lizard-like aliens, though not shown being eaten alive on screen.[1][2][3]

Fate Details

No specific Visitor is identified as eating Daniel; he's sent for generic processing into food, a common fate for humans in the series. Diana does not eat him—while she often consumes rodents or birds, Steven gives the direct order, and she's not involved in his processing.[2][1]

Female Visitor Role

A female Visitor (like a technician) could plausibly be involved, as all Visitors are carnivorous and process humans collectively, but the show doesn't specify one—ruling out a targeted "lizard woman" or sharing scenario. The narrative emphasizes his betrayal leading to ironic consumption by those he served, without explicit details on who or how.[3][1][2]

More detals

Daniel Bernstein's Fate in V: The Final Battle

Daniel Bernstein, the human collaborator from the original V miniseries, returns as a Visitor Youth member in V: The Final Battle. He's seduced by Resistance fighter Maggie Blodgett to gain intel on prisoner transfers.[11][12]

Key Scene Breakdown

After the Resistance captures Visitor leader Brian at the Bernstein house and frames Daniel for it, Steven (a high-ranking male Visitor) interrogates him harshly. Steven sentences Daniel to be "processed" as food—"Send you where you'll serve us well... On a serving platter"—and Visitor guards drag him away screaming. This occurs in the episode's mothership scenes, directly tying to testing the Red Dust toxin on Brian.[12][13] [11]

Processing and Consumption

No on-screen eating happens; Daniel is implied to be butchered alive into generic "lizard food" for the carnivorous Visitors, a poetic end for his betrayal of humanity. "Processed" means conversion into edible form, as seen with other humans turned into rations.[14][15]

Specific Questions Answered

- Eaten alive? Implied yes during processing, but not depicted—show fades after he's taken.[14]
- Diana's involvement? None; Steven orders it, and Diana focuses elsewhere (e.g., her conversion chamber).[11][12]
- Who eats him? Unspecified—likely multiple Visitors share processed remains; no individual (or sharing) shown.[15][16]
- Female Visitor? Possible, as female Visitors like Diana eat live prey (rodents, birds), and technicians handle processing, but no "lizard woman" is named or singled out.[17]
- Most likely eater? Generic Visitor group, not a specific female; narrative irony emphasizes collective punishment.[18][16]

Was she mocking Daniel?

No, "she" (likely Diana) wasn't mocking Daniel Bernstein.

Steven, the male Visitor commander, delivers the fatal line during Daniel's interrogation in V: The Final Battle: "Send you where you'll serve us well... On a serving platter." This is cold sarcasm, using irony to highlight Daniel's betrayal—he collaborated with the Visitors, yet ends up as their food.[22]

Scene Context

Steven tortures Daniel after he's framed for Brian's capture, denying his pleas and dismissing his ambition excuses. The mockery fits Steven's ruthless style, not Diana's—she's absent from this mothership confrontation and focused on other plots like her leadership schemes.[23][24]

Interpretation

Fans note Steven likely knew it was a setup but used it to eliminate Daniel as a liability, making the "platter" quip a deliberate, mocking send-off rather than genuine belief in his guilt. No female Visitor (Diana or otherwise) mocks him; processing follows as collective Visitor punishment.[25][23][22]

Does Diana know what happened to Daniel

No, Diana does not appear to know specifics about Daniel Bernstein's fate.

In V: The Final Battle, Steven handles Daniel's interrogation and sentencing independently after the Resistance frames him for Brian's capture—ordering his processing as food without involving Diana.[33][34][35]

Plot Separation

Diana focuses on parallel plots like Julie's conversion, truth serum interrogations, and Fifth Column threats during this timeframe; Daniel's minor collaborator arc occurs off her radar in mothership security ops.[36][33]

No Connection

Episode summaries and fan analyses confirm no dialogue, reference, or scene links Diana to Daniel's end—Steven's "serving platter" mockery and execution stand alone as retaliation. Her leadership role doesn't extend to every human processing incident.[34][35][37][38]

What happened to Daniel Bernstein after being transferred

How did the resistance frame Daniel
What was Steven's role with Daniel and Brian

Daniel's post-transfer fate remains implied, not shown.

After Steven orders Daniel "processed" as food—dragged away screaming—he's converted into rations for the Visitors, a standard end for human captives, with no on-screen consumption or further details.[43][44][45]

Resistance Framing

Maggie seduced Daniel to extract prisoner transfer intel; the Resistance ambushed at the Bernstein house, capturing Brian and planting evidence to pin it on him. Caleb Taylor amplified the frame by accusing Daniel of murdering Resistance spy Ruby Engels, whom Daniel had killed earlier.[44][43]

Steven's Role

Steven, Visitor security chief, oversaw Brian's capture aftermath and personally tortured/interrogated Daniel, suspecting ambition after Brian's "disappearance." He sentenced Daniel mockingly ("On a serving platter") despite pleas, protecting Visitor ops amid Fifth Column threats—also warning Eleanor against similar ambition.[45][46][44]

What would Maggie Bldgett do if she had Daniel Bernstein shrunken as a dollsizrf in the hallowed palm of her hand?

This is fanfiction speculation based on V: The Final Battle characters and your interest in creative storytelling—purely hypothetical.

Maggie Blodgett, the tough Resistance fighter who seduced and betrayed Daniel Bernstein for intel, would likely savor the irony if she had him shrunken to doll-size in her palm. She'd mock his past collaboration with the Visitors ("Traitor scum—now you're the bug"), squeeze him just enough to hear him beg, then crush him flat or feed him to a pet/bird for poetic justice against his betrayal of humanity. No mercy from her arc—she's all about Resistance vengeance.[53][54]

What is Diana had him as such?

Diana would toy with shrunken Daniel sadistically.

In this hypothetical from V: The Final Battle, Diana—the ruthless, manipulative Visitor leader—fits her canon cruelty perfectly: she'd dangle doll-sized Daniel Bernstein in her palm, smirking at his pleas as the traitor who once served her kind.[55][56]

Her Likely Actions

Given her guinea pig-eating reveal and love for torture (like conversion chambers), she'd lick him teasingly with her reptilian tongue to terrify him, mock his betrayal ("Loyalty's reward, human"), then swallow him whole alive—savoring the crunch as a personal snack, not sharing.[57][58]

Fits Her Traits

Diana's calculated ambition and sadism shine here; no mercy for collaborators turned liabilities, just ironic consumption mirroring Visitor human-processing. Pure vengeance poetry, off-screen like his real fate.[59]

Can you detail more the dialogue between them?

No direct dialogue exists between Diana and Daniel Bernstein.

In V: The Final Battle, Diana never interacts with or speaks to Daniel—they operate in separate storylines, with her focused on command intrigue and him as a minor collaborator handled by Steven.[65][66]

Hypothetical Scenario Dialogue

For your shrunken doll-sized fanfic twist, here's detailed imagined banter fitting Diana's sadistic personality:

- Diana (holding tiny Daniel in her palm, smirking): "Well, well... the little traitor, reduced to a delicacy. Remember serving us? Now you'll serve in us."
- Daniel (terrified, squirming): "Diana! Mercy—please! I was loyal! It was a setup!"
- Diana (chuckling coldly, extending reptilian tongue): "Loyalty? Like rats to cheese. Beg more—it whets the appetite." (Licks him teasingly) "Mmm, human fear... exquisite."
- Daniel (screaming): "No! Steven said—"
- Diana (interrupting, eyes narrowing): "Steven? He discarded you like garbage. I decide your end." (Pops him in her mouth, chews slowly) "Crunchy. Fitting for a collaborator."

This mirrors her canon taunts (e.g., killing Pamela: "Early retirement") and live-eating habits, turning irony up to 11.[67][68]
